

Lacock Botanic Garden Glasshouse

The glasshouse was constructed in the early 2000s, based on an earlier 19th century layout. The timber structure has suffered from rapid decline, as detailed in the 2018 report. Repairs were carried out in 2020 to the western section. There were not suitable resources to continue this work, and subsequent decay on the eastern end has resulted in the structure itself being in need of replacement, as well as the sashes. Currently the resources are not available to rebuild this section, but the retention of the lower brick walls will show the size and form of the original glasshouse. Rebuilding will be considered in the future if this is deemed financially viable.
